Farmer Al is going fishing and the Kittens are running behind. Al turns and orders them back. They run out to left and Al exits to right. The Kittens meet a Cat who has a violin. They tell him about the farmer <sup>and</sup> are promised revenge by the Cat after he shows them his muscle. We next see the farmer unsuccessfully fishing from the bank. The Cat, with the violin entering the scene where the fishing is going on, takes out his violin and plays it. The fish attracted by the notes hop right on to the plate the Cat has set for them. The Cat eats the fish with great relish and the farmers mouth waters at seeing him. The Cat repeats the music and the notes go down below the water. They are caught by the fish and one of them escapes and comes to the surface with a fish following him right on to the plate. The Cat eats this one also, and the farmer, angered chases him takes violin and rows out to the raft. He plays the violin and the fish come <sup>up</sup> but slip from his grasp. The Cat gets an idea and runs to the vacuum cleaner, and pokes the nozzle below the water. Everthing within sight is sucked up, three frags in court, the judge and many fish. Meanwhile the farmer keeps on playing and the fish still slipping away from him. Then one large fish, attracted by the music, jumps on to the raft. A battle ensues ending with the farmer swimming for his life; the big fish behind him. The farmer swims to shore and kicks the fish. Both are caught in the vacuum cleaner and come out with the rest of the fish in a great stream, sailing down the street, into a sewer and then out into the ocean. The Cat standing over the sewer outlet, cheers as farmer comes through and the farmer looking about and not seeing the big fish is happy. But lo and behold he sees him again and the chase continues the farmer realizing that "Disappointment follows undue confidence!"
